ABRAHAM LINCOLN
IN KENTUCKY LITERATURE

BY
WILLARD ROUSE JILLSON

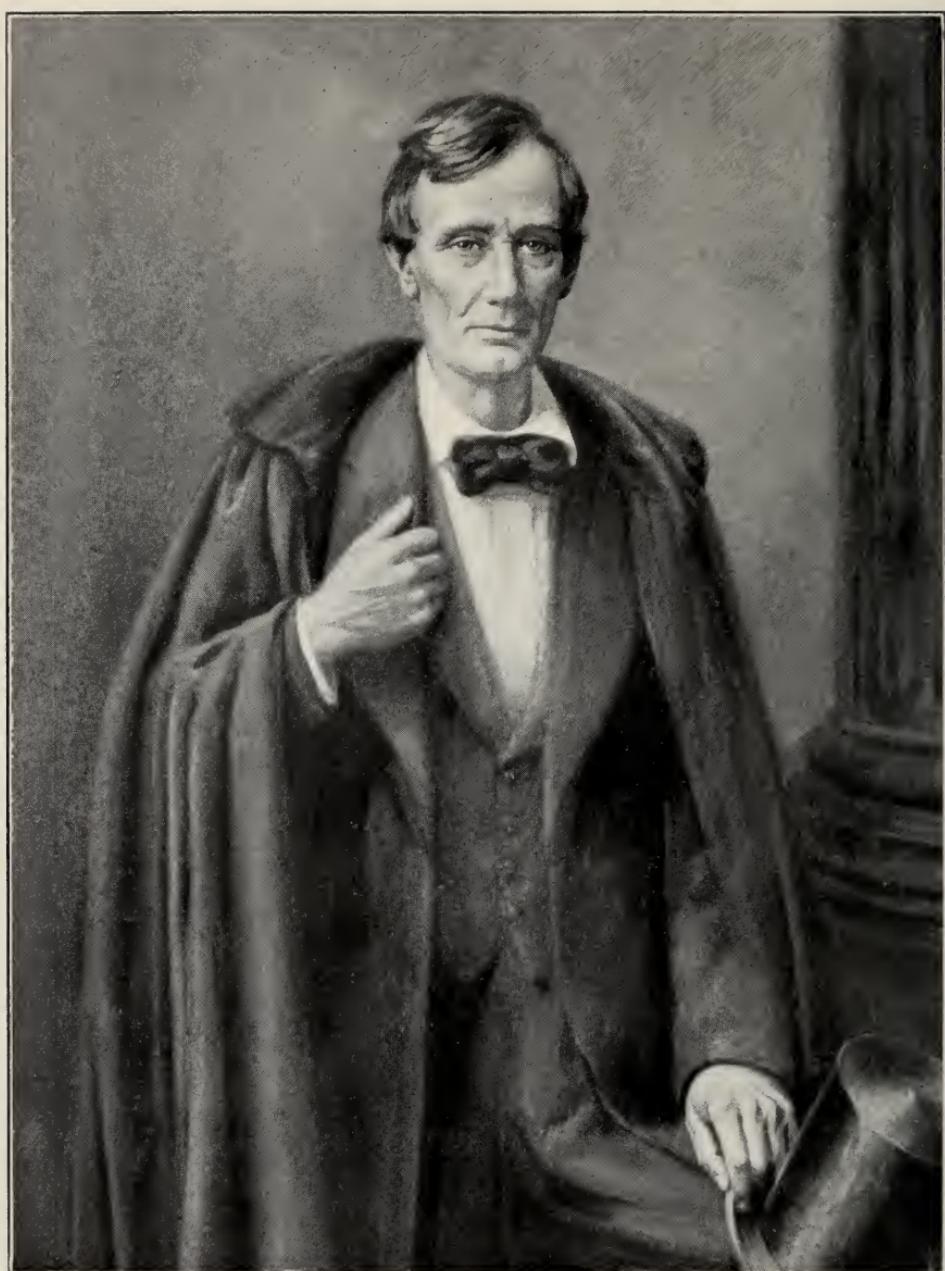

1951

A faint, light-colored watermark of the Lincoln Memorial is visible in the background. The memorial is a neoclassical structure with a large portico of Corinthian columns supporting a classical entablature and a triangular pediment. The columns are fluted and have prominent bases.

Lincoln the Orator. The Courier-Journal. P. 5, col. 5. Louisville, Kentucky. November 10, 1911.

Address at Lincoln Memorial near Hodgenville, Kentucky, on November 9, 1911.

"Seldom has there been a time when men were not to be moved to great deeds through the power of eloquence. Lincoln was one of those who possessed that power. He came from no school, and was the pride of no university. Without wealth or family prestige he outstripped all competitors in the race for fame. He became the unchallenged voice of one of the world's most famous movements. It was when the blight of slavery threatened the free soil of the North that Lincoln's voice rang through the land."

BOYD, LUCINDA

The Sorrows of Nancy. 95 pp. Illust. O. E. Flanhart Printing Company, Richmond, Virginia. 1899; Reprinted by The Hobson Press, Cynthiana, Kentucky. 1943.
